Andrews Federal Credit Union launches new financial webcasts

Suitland, MD (July 2, 2008) – Andrews Federal Credit Union introduces a series of free financial webcasts to members through its Online Education Center. The new education webcasts, each approximately five minutes in length, highlight various financial topics like budgeting, credit management, teaching kids about money and college planning.

The financial webcasts come as part of the company’s plan to make financial education resources accessible to more members. “We all lead busy lives. The financial webcasts give our members the option to have this information readily available to them any time both day and night anywhere in the world. Although we do provide a variety of in-person seminars, the webcasts give members the flexibility to gather the information on their time. It also provides a more personalized approach since the facilitator for each webcast is an Andrews Federal staff member,” stated Suzanne Curren, Director of Member Education.

Financial education is an integral part of Andrews Federal’s mission. “Our key focus is to provide resources to help members make smart financial decisions. Many of the seminars offer practical information such as worksheets and interactive guides that they can use immediately,” stated Michael Queen, Member Education Counselor.
